

Vancouver rabbit rescue and advocacy

What is VRRRA?

A non-profit, volunteer-run rabbit rescue organization. The group was created as a response to the lack of rabbit shelters in Vancouver. Its members believe that rabbits are misunderstood and neglected as a result of ignorance, rather than intention. The organization rescues and fosters rabbits and has a lengthy adoption process to find qualified clients to adopt.

Roles

VRRRA President and Director Olga Betts
Decide on the priorities of the organization as the external spokesperson for VRRRA.

Marketing & Social Media
Promote VRRRA through social media and outreach, such as with events.

Volunteers
Volunteers at VRRRA helps care for rabbits and support daily shelter operations.

Foster & Adoption Coordinator Jillian and Faye
Responsible for managing and coordinating the entire "adoption process" of the rabbits from rescue to their new homes. They are the main point of contact and check in on the client throughout the process.

Reasoning

Rabbits are often overlooked in animal rescue, resulting in inadequate care. VRRRA addresses this by rescuing, fostering, and educating people about domestic rabbits. Their mission to support a neglected community aligns with our design vision of focusing on overlooked needs and creating solutions that improve care and awareness.

Design Focus

Educate Potential Customers
Provide information and raise awareness to prevent uncommitted clients and the abandonment of rabbits

Campaign for donations
50% of VRRRA's operations are funded by donations.

Help get more volunteers
VRRRA is fully run by volunteers, who help maintain and foster rabbits.

Streamline and clarify the adoption process
VRRRA's current adoption process is lengthy and can be improved to be made more efficient and user-friendly, while ensuring proper screening of qualification.
